Carry My STORY
Celebrating Who We Are

Twenty three schools and their communities have been working together to get to know one another better and celebrate the things that make individuals, families, and communities special. They started by asking questions about their own identity: “Who am I?” “Who are we?” followed by “Where do we live?” “How do we live together?” Linked schools and groups have collected and exchanged stories with one another. Children and students have taken time to explore and empathise with the stories given to them by their partners.

This year, thirty eight people from our refugee communities have also participated in the project, generously sharing their stories with the children, exploring themes of exclusion, inclusion, identity and belonging.

The finale is an opportunity for everyone to share a colourful “story market” of suitcases, boxes and other containers full of words, pictures, objects and photographs. There will also be songs, drama, poems and presentations performed by children and adults.
